#MarineRunWithTheMarines

Details

The "Marine Corps Marathon" will be celebrating its 50th anniversary in 2025. The race, also known as the "People's Marathon," aims to improve community spirit. The marathon is known as the "Marathon of Monuments" because the route passes through all of Washington, D.C.'s iconic national landmarks.

The race is the largest marathon in the world that does not offer monetary prizes. It has also been named the "Best Marathon in the Mid Atlantic" and the "Best Marathon for Charities."

Furthermore, this course will take you through many of the city's historic key places, including the White House, the Pentagon, the Marine Corps War Memorial, the Washington Monument (the obelisk), and many more...

There's a reason why residents of the United States' capital city refer to themselves as people from "DC" rather than "Washington." This is because "the latest news from Washington" begins and ends with the federal government, not the city that locals and visitors have grown to love. DC is home to some of the world's best museums, many of which are free to visit.
